ROUND TABLE TALKS

JAPANESE-AMERICAN PROBLEMS

do-both meetings have become folktales in Japanese for "Bunjin Hyomen," an influential monthly magazine published in Japan, held a salon for dealing with a new age and published photographic records of do-both several years ago together around a table u-nyū restaurant, and spent freely on some things; seen by photographers and published in the magazines.

The reason for this method being popular among us is probably that the representative people, in part, is to be thought comfortably seated together at a table and spontaneously they are hardly hard to catch.

NT OF TRIPARTITE ALLIANCE AND

have been some feeling on the part of the United States, even so, for there would be danger.

no. But I doubt that Admiral Richardson really believed the United States could not fight Japan. It is unlikely for anybody in the position of Commander-in-Chief to say at this critical time that it might happen because they were weak. There must have been some misunderstanding.

they have recruited about 15,000 men; there are 100,000 applicants. Therefore, if they want more men, it is no money as they like. Yet it is not known how much money will be required with Japan income strained. It would be impossible for a Commander-in-Chief to reveal weakness in their own assessment.

Amper Zeynep:

As Captain Willsie is going to leave so early, I want him to speak on the situation as it was, before and after the announcement of the Tripartite Alliance, or an American public opinion, or other such topic.

Amper:

Even before the announcement of the Tripartite Alliance, I believe that American public opinion feared Germany and regarded Japan as being impudent. The fear of Germany ap-present in the public as increasing wariness (70%), as attacks on the Japanese (60%), and as a growing distrust of the United States Government with the increasing war. In American public opinion there is more such contrary sentiment. According to a study of public opinion published in the Spectator magazine of Fortune, even to the question "What do you think should be done to do with our relations with Japan?", 27% opposed the United States, 27% favored the United States, and 46% were undecided. The latter is so elastic to the American supply of rubber and tin that any produced only in the nation, and 36.2% showed Japan being the standpoint of suppressing her ambition.

There is regards the question of how Japan is to be treated, the A group public opinion, so that of appointment, represented 20.7%, which 20.7% proposed the creation of a new treaty and 20.7% proposed the creation of a new treaty. The B group public opinion, which 20.7% proposed the creation of a new treaty, there were less than 20.7% representing other views. The C group representing 20.7% stated upon attacking Japan, 71.1% of these proposed an embargo, and 30.4% were 800 supporters of Japan by threat of arms. Based on our analysis we note that there is a C group which had 21% votes to leave nations to their natural course. There was no vote for counting a war against Japan. To oppose Japan by military threat had only 4% of the total votes. Viewed from this survey, the wish for appeasement prevailed, yet these questions were submitted recently in economic questions, and therefore the results cannot represent general public opinion. But no racial bias are clearly

The resources necessary for making the United States self-sufficient lie in the South Sea. If ever these resources in the South Sea get into the hands of Japan, the United States would not remain silent. Americans are not merely sentimental but are commercially practical. Therefore if Japan starts to execute her policy of southern advance or to establish a great East Asia co-operation prosperity zone, it will be absolutely impossible for the United States to remain silent. We are here, the agents of such

The Future statistics just mentioned are of August and published in the September number of the magazine. The present situation may be somewhat different. Besides, the response does not represent the opinion of the lower classes, which is a point to be taken note of, too.

As to American public opinion regarding the intervention of the Tripartite Alliance, judging from what we learn from American newspapers, the American people knew before hand that the alliance was being discussed, but they never thought it would come so quickly. American public opinion had no counter-

At the Eisenhower-Ashida Conference, the Japanese Ambassador to America had made it his mission to do as much as he could to encourage acceptance of Washington on the part of February, there will be a Japanese-American War unless America takes the initiative. The purpose of the Tripartite Pact is to prevent a war in the Pacific, and Japan's attitude is not to isolate America, but to isolate America, if necessary, even from the United States concerning the Asiatic controversy of the [ending of the Japanese Empire].
